Artists who champion good causes

Lottie Withers is a French-English illustrator based in London. She graduated from Middlesex University (London) with a master's in Children's Book Illustration and Graphic Novels. Taking inspiration from nature and myths, Lottie tells stories of adventures in the wild, and likes to represent different cultures with heroic and relatable characters aimed at children and young adults. She is also inspired by illustrators like Jane Ray, Chris Riddell and Luke Pearson, and likes to experiment with different styles and colour schemes to bring a story to life. When she is not working on a project, she is often doodling in a sketchbook or reading a fantasy novel in a cosy corner, always finding inspiration for new stories and illustrations.
