Artists who champion good causes

Natalie Foss is a Norwegian freelance illustrator and artist born in 1987 in Oslo, Norway. She's currently based in London, where she works from a small, cozy studio space. Natalie graduated with a bachelor's degree in illustration from Kingston university in 2013, then moved back to Norway for a few years, before she decided to move back to London again in 2019. When drawing, Natalie primarily uses coloured pencils on paper, but getting the hang on and enjoying working with digital tools too. Natalie works in different fields, from personal projects to commercial commissions, and focuses on strong colours and contrasts. In her drawings she often mixes the flat, almost graphic, with the 3-dimensional and detailed - often portraying alienated beings adorned by 60s/70s inspired patterns and motifs. She finds inspiration in the everyday life - music, the ups and downs, people, words, subcultures, fashion, patterns, light/shadow, and other observations.
